The challenges that New York City faces are often too large and too complex to solve alone. It’s one of the many reasons that we create a network of nonprofit partners to be on the ground in the community to help us achieve our goals. United Way of New York City partners with more than 550 Community Based Organizations (CBOs) to develop and deploy valuable, human-centric, and real-time solutions. These partners help us implement our solutions in neighborhoods across the City, course correct programs and services when necessary, and provide us with valuable feedback from beneficiaries.